wæpen-geþæc, -tak, es; n. A wapentake, a term used in northern England where in the south hundred was used: 'Quod alii vocant hundredum, supradicti comitatus (counties northward from Northamptonshire) vocant wapentagium', L. Ed. C. 30; Th. i. 455. The word, which seems of Danish origin (cf. Icel. wāpna-tak, though this is used in a different sense), is thus explained in the document above cited: Cum quis accipiebat prefecturam wapentagii, die statuto in loco ubi consueverant congregari, omnes majores natu contra eum conveniebant, et, descendente eo de equo suo, omnes assurgebant ei. Ipse vero erecta lancea sua, ab omnibus, secundum morem, foedus accipiebat: omnes enim quotquot venissent cum lanceis suis ipsius hastam tangebant, et ita se confirmabant per contactum armorum, pace palam concessa. Anglice vero arma vocantur wapen, et tacere confirmare, quasi armorum confirmatio, vel ut magis expresse, secundum linguam Anglicam, dicamus wapentac, i. e. armorum tactus: wapen enim arma sonat, tac tactus est. Quomobrem potest cognosci quod hac de causa totus ille conventus dicitur wapentac, eo quod per tactum armorum suorum ad invicem confederates sunt. On this explanation see Stubbs' Const. Hist. i. 99 sqq.:—

Wætlinga-stræt, e; f. Watling Street, the Roman road running from Dover, through Canterbury, Rochester, London, St. Alban's, Dunstable, Fenny Stratford, Towcester, Weedon, Wroxeter to Chester. [From Douere in to Chestre tillep Watlingestrete, R. Glouc. 8, 1. According to Trevisa it went 'besides Wrokecestre, and then forth to Stratton, and so forth by the myddell of Wales unto Cardykan, and endeth atte Irisshe see.' Polychron. bk. i. c. 45. Florence of Worcester, in his Chronicle under the year 1013, gives a mythical explanation of the word, that it was the road which the sons of King Weatla made across England]:—Dis sint ða landgemæra ðara landa tō Baddanbyrig (Badby) and tō Doddanforða (Dodford) and tō Eferdūne (Everdon) (all three places are in Northamptonshire, a little to the west of Watling Street) . . . Weland, es; m. A character in old Teutonic legends celebrated for his skill as a smith. Allusion to him is found in Middle English poetry: 'My sword . . . throw Weland wrought yt wase,' Torrent of Portugal, ed. Halliwell, i. 428 (v. preface, pp. vii sqq.), and a trace of the legend is preserved in the name Wayland Smith's Cave, in Berkshire (v. infra). Perhaps, too, the same may be said of the river-name Weland (but see Weolud), which occurs in Latin charters as aqua de Uesland, Cod. Dip. Kmbl. i. 78, 10, aqua de Uesland, 304, 6: ii. pp. 90, 281, 416:—Weland him wrāces cunnade, earfoþa dreag, Exon. Th. 377, 9; Deór. 1. Welandes geworc ne geswicþ monna ænigum, Wald. 2; Vald. 1, 2. wic. The word is generally neuter, but as it is often used in the plural where a singular might express the meaning, the similarity of neuter plural and feminine singular accusatives seems to have caused the word to be taken sometimes as feminine, e.g. tō ānre wic, Homl. Th. i. 402, 22. A weak form also seems to be used, Chart. Th. 446, 29. I. a dwelling-place, abode, habitation, residence, lodging, quarters:—Hē tō him wilniende wæs ðætte heó him funden swylce londære swylce hē mid ārum on beón mehte, and his wic ðær on byrig beón mihte on his līfe, Chart. wic-gerēfa, an; m. The reveue of a wic. v. wic, III. From the Latin words which are translated by wicgerēfa, it seems that the official so denominated was concerned in collecting taxes, and from a passage in the laws that it was one of his duties to act as witness at sales. As a wic-gerēfa of Winchester is mentioned in the Chronicle, wic cannot be confined to small towns:—Wicgerēfa publicanus, Wrt. Voc. i. 18, 47. Se (St. Matthew) was teloniaris, ðæt is gafoles monieud and wicgerēfa, Shr. 131, 24. worþ, weorþ, wurþ, wierþ, wyrþ, e; f.: es; m.: wyrþe, wirþe (v. wyrþe-land, and first extract under I), es; m. I. a close (?), an enclosed place (?):—Ūt on rigewyrde (the rye-close?) westewardne, Cod. Dip. Kmbi. iii. 437, 35. Uppan rigeweorde on dā ealdan dīc; of dære dīc ūt on rigewyrde heal, v. 377, 21. On lindwyrde, iii. 375, 6.

II. an enclosed homestead, a habitation with surrounding land:—Be hagan on weorde hege; forð be ðan hege on weordapeldre, Cod. Dip. Kmbi. v. 381, 30. Tō ealdan wyrde . . . wið westan ealdan wyrde, 195, 3-5. Ondlang hīweges tō Ecuignes wyrde, iii. 437, 32. Tō Cumbran weorde; of Cumbran weorde tō dære mæran æc, 78, 35. ¶ perhaps in the last two passages weorþ may be regarded as the second part of a compound name: such expressions as 'in loco ubi solicolae illius regionis Ægeleswurd nomen imposuerunt' are not uncommon in the Charters, and such names seem to have remained. In the index of places given in Cod. Dip. Kmbi. vi. 251 sqq. about 70 combinations with weorþ occur, and for many of these modern representatives terminating in -worth are found. Already places whose names contain the form (cf. those with ūn), when they are mentioned in the Charters, may have extended beyond their original limits and have become properties, whose area was considerable (e.g. Hē gean dæra hundtwyftiga hīda æt Wyrðe, Cod. Dip. Kmbi. iii. 127, 15. Brinkewurda terra est. v. hīdarum, iv. 167, 1. Æt Æscmæres-weorde (-wyrde, l. 14), x. hīda, v. 218, 22), whose boundaries consequently had to be defined (e.g. Ðis syndon dā landgemæro tō wyrde, vi. 8, 25. Tō Ceorles-wyrde, iii. 458, 3. Tō Ægeles-uurde, 428, 18. Tō Æscmæres-wierde, v. 173, 36. Tō Peādan-wyrde, 383, 8), and upon which a number of persons resided (e.g. . . . xxx. mansas illic ubi Anglica appellatione dicitur æt Wurde (Weorde, 329, 32), v. 395, 13. Quarta terra . . . manentium, et uocatur Gisleresuuyrth, i. 44, 11. Monasterium quod situm est in loco qui dicitur æt Baedricsworth, ii. 258, 25; iii. 272, 10; 305, 11. In Blacewyrde .v. mansas). Various Latin words are used in speaking of such places; Wealawyrð is a uillula, iii. 347, 11; v. 346, 33; Æbbewyrð is a uiculus, iv. 164, 8-10; Æscmæresweorð is a uilla, v. 216, 10; Gisleresuuyrth is a terra, i. 44, 11, so also Brinkeurda, iv. 167, 1, and Deceurthe, ii. 367, 22-23; Ceolwurd is spoken of as aliquantulum terrae, ii. 135, 16, 22; and Oswald grants aliquam telluris partem æt Bynnyngwyrde, iii. 177, 23. Corresponding to these last terms are the English forms with land: Ic gean dæra twēgra landa Ceorlesweorþe and Cochanfelde, iii. 274, 4. Ic gean dæra twēgra landa æt Cochanfelde and æt Ceorlesweorþe, 272, 8.

Ðæt land æt Ægeleswyrde, 125, 10. Some passages are added which may further illustrate the different forms and the variation in gender:—In loco quae dicitur Meranword, Txts. 437, 10. Ab occidente Hodo-wurda, Cod. Dip. Kmbi. ii. 49, 18. Oslanwyrð and eall dæt dærtō gebryfe, v. 267, 36. Andlang Ædeleswyrde, 195, 3. Tō Lulleswyrde hynnan, iii. 343, 31. Tō Ufiawyrda gemære, 428, 22. Tō ðan norðran Denceswurde . . . dā þreō hīda on ðan norðran Denceswurde, v. 310, 34-36. Denceswyrde, 400, 12. On Cwicleswyrde eastwardne, iii. 344, 7; v. 121, 6. Oð Bulonweorde; of Bulanweorde, iii. 343, 37. On Hananweorde, 403, 11. On tūnlesweorþ eastwardne, 425, 22, 28. On Wulfrēdeswyrð; of Wulfrēdeswyrde, iv. 103, 13.

III. a place enclosed by buildings, a court or hall of a house, a place or street of a town:—Hē sæt ūta in worde sedeat foris in atrio, Mt. Kmbi. Lind. 26, 69; Mk. Skt. Rush. 14, 66. Oð tō on worde usque in atrium, 14, 54; Ju. Skt. Lind. Rush. 18, 15. Bifora ðone (þ, Lind.) word ante atrium, Mk. Skt. Rush. 14, 68. On word (atrium) dæs dōmernes, 15, 16. In plagiword t on placcum in plateis, Rtl. 36, 7. [O. Sax. wurd:—Thār that korn gikrund habad emu thiū wurd bihagōd, Hēl. 2478. M. L. Ger. word, wurd an enclosed homestead, v. Leo, A. S. Names of Places, p. 60: Jelliūhaus, Die Westfälische Ortsnamen, p. 134.] v. worþig, wyrþe-land. worþ-apulder, e; f. An apple-tree growing by a homestead (?):—Be hagan on weorde hege; forð be ðan hege on weordapeldre, Cod. Dip. Kmbi. v. 381, 31.

worþ-cærse, an; f. The name of some plant:—Wordcærsa grissa garina, Wrt. Voc. ii. 42, 31. v. worþig-cærse.

worþig, weorþig, wurþig, wyrþ g [Ps. Surt. has forms as from wordign; one such form is found in Ps. Spl. C., and a dative wordine occurs in Bd. S. 539, 42], es; m. I. this word, which remains in proper names in the form -worthy, has much the same meaning as worþ (q. v.), and seems sometimes to exchange with it (cf. In Benigurthia, Cod. Dip. Kmbi. i. 70, 27, with: In loco qui dicitur Benninguuyrd, ii. 152, 19).

In its simplest application it seems to mean an enclosed homestead:—Be Ceorles weordige (wordige, v. l.). Ceorles weordig (weordig, wurdig, v. ll.) sceal beon wintres and sumeres betýued. Gif hē bið untýued, and reed hī neahgebures ceape in on hīs ægen geap, nāh hē æt ðam ceape nānwuht, L. In. 40; Th. i. 126, 12-16. But it is found also in connection with land of considerable extent (e.g. Trium cassatorum in loco qui dicitur Wordi (cf. tō Wordie, 34), Cod. Dip. Kmbi. v. 109, 7. Ðis synd dā landgemæra tō Wordige, 110, 32. .v. cassatos in loco qui appellatur æt Wordige (Wordie, 120, 5), 118, 31), and where there are habitations of considerable importance (e.g. Ego Offa rex sedens in regali palatio in Tamouuorthige, i. 172, 19. Tamouuordie, 171, 6. In loco celeberrimo quae a vulgo vocatur Tomewordig, 238, 11). Various Latin words are used in reference to places in whose names the word occurs:—In uico celeberrimo qui vocatur Tomouuordig, i. 256, 24. In uilla omnibus notissima quae Wordig nuncupatur, v. 199, 10. Rura . . . Tanton . . . Uuordig, . . . Stoke, iii. 155, 27. .viii. mansas agelloli, ibidem ubi uulgares prisico more uocant æt Wordige, v. 240, 9. Wordig, vi. 244, 13, is agellus in the body of the Charter, iv. 150, 26. In Bd. 3, 14 a vico Cataractone is in English fram Cetrihtwordige (-wordine, v. l.), S. 539, 42. Other instances of the use of the word in reference to localities are the following:—Unam mansam loco qui celebri æt Mono-wyrðige appellatur. . . . Ðis synd dære ānre hýde landgemæru tō Monawurðige. Ærust on Monawurðiges forde, vi. 57, 9-15. Ofer dæt hæð wið Cyblessweordiges, Cod. Dip. Kmbi. iii. 392, 5. Sūd tō Elle-wurðie, vi. 194, 11. Of ðam ealdan lace on Burhgeardeswordig, iii. 412, 12. Instances of the independent use of the word are the following:—Wurðig (worþig, weorþi, v. ll.) fundus, Ælfic. Gr. 8; Zup. 28, 12. Worþig predium, Wrt. Voc. i. 84, 59. Hīo an dæs wordiges, Cod. Dip. Kmbi. vi. 133, 35. Of dære rōde on Headeburhe weordig; of dæm wordige ondlong hryeces, iii. 77, 10. Sancte Andreas circian and done wordig de dærtō gaunnan wes, v. 163, 20. At Sunemannes wyrðige; ond of ðam wyrðige . . . on Sunemannes weordig, vi. 62, 16-31. Wē writaþ him dā circian and done circstall and done wordig tō dære burnan and done croft be sūðan dære burnan, iii. 53, 1. Ðæt se gīðere hīs weordig (wordig, Hatt. MS.) and his land mid unryhte rýme cum multiplicare large habitationis spatia cupiunt, Past. 44; Swt. 328, 21.
